frequency-modulated (FM) screening

A method of creating halftones where the imaged spots are all the same size, but the frequency or number of dots changes in a given area to simulate different tonal values. There are more dots in a dark area and fewer in a light area.