run-length encoding (RLE)

A compression method by which the computer records only the starting pixel value and the repetitions of that pixel value until another color transition occurs. This compression method is used with NLW, LW, and TIFF/IT LW output files.